Work Offered

We offer an internship in the field of forest engineering related research. The student will accompany staff of the Institute in their daily work in the office and in the field. The Institute's research topics include fuel wood supply with special emphasis on storage and supply networks as well as bioenergy as a whole, forest resource accessibility (forest road construction and maintenance) and steep terrain timber harvesting (cable yarding and winch supported fully mechanized harvesting).

What we expect from a student is interest in scientific work, basic scientific skills and scientific thinking. Students with a forest engineering background are preferred, but anyone with other background but strong interest in forest engineering research is warmly welcome. We would like to especially encourage female applicants to apply for work in the field of forest engineering.
